HELLO! CENTRAL! (Cont.)

In the 30 years, since direct distance dialing (DDD) was established, communication needs forced a change in area codes, locally, from 313 to 810 December 1, 1993. So we've come from a single phone in the Judson Brothers grocery store, to the exchange in the Argus printing office, to the switchboard on the second floor of the Brighton State Bank, to large windowless structures with apparently magical functions going on with little fanfare or our notice. The telephone has developed from a crank to having multiple means of communication in one's home, office or vehicle. The directory has grown from a list in the local newspaper to one that weighs over 25 pounds. (A valid criterion indicating change?) The business directory pages were instituted with the first printed directory. The 1981 issue was half full of the 'yellow' pages, alcohol they weren't yellow. These have become a means by which one may locate a needed product or service.

Before WII Dicky Tracy wore a wrist radio. (Surely the writer is not alone in remembering that cartoon.) Many felt the cartoonist's imagination was quite erratic. Today personal 'beepers' have replaced Dicky's wrist radio. This writer's grandchildren make light of the study necessary for her to fully utilize the many possibilities of her telephone. Touch one button to converse, another to relay recorded messages, another instantly connects with an oft called number without dialing, etc., etc. A recently purchased piece of telephone equipment is near obsolescence by the time it is installed.

Late local historian Bill Pless writes of several anecdotes concerning early telephone use such as the farmer living on his father's farm. The father didn't want the telephone installed and complained mightily when the son and wife had one put in. Thinking to quiet his complaint they finally got him to call his friend, Seth, who lived a mile away. After shouting, 'Hello, Seth!' the old man stepped back. The son encouraged his friend to continue. 'I'm just waiting for that hello to get down to Seth's.'

Another story concerns a self-made successful farmer and his sister who were enjoying the fruits of their labor and wanted everyone to know. A telephone and a furnace were installed and a car purchased; at a time when few had such luxuries. He came to town and called his sister from several stores where other customers could overhear his part of the conversation. 'Did the telephone ring loud enough?' he asked. 'Is the furnace operating all right?' Did you adjust the chains to the draft and dampers? Is the house warm enough?' Then he'd tell her the car was running splendidly and made every hill in high gear. Frequently seen wiping dust off the windshield and fenders and openly admiring the vehicle, neighbors would often cause him some concern by deliberately parking close to his car. (By Marianna Bair with thanks to Bill Pless' writings, clipings from the Brighton Argus and Livingston County Press, Olive Smith Griffin, Alice Newcomb, Jane Tomlinson, Janice Field and Theresa Swielolak.)

HISTORY BOOK COMMITTEE FORMED

At a May 1 meeting it was decided to consider the preparation of a book detailing the history of the Brighton area. Carol McMacken volunteered to be chairman; Shirley Knight will be her assistant. However, much more help will be needed; many committees to be formed; much research to be done; etc., etc.

The fourth Thursday of the month has been established as a meeting date of the book committee. Persons wishing to offer help, pictures, documents, etc., should call Carol 231-2957, or Marianna Bair, 229-6402. A name for this book will be needed. Any suggestions?

E. Reed Fletcher was an avid local historian of the area in the 50s and 60s. Is a collection of his writings available?
