POWER COMES TO BRIGHTON

Beginning in 1835, many with the surname of Power(s) began making the journey from the east, mainly New York, to buy and settle land in Michigan.

Among them was Robert D. Power and wife, Alseta. They built and operated the first public house in Brighton on Grand River at the southeast corner of the Trail and what would later be named Spencer Road. In 1836, the structure was considered as "...one of the first steps taken toward giving the place the character of a village." It was probably built of lumber - the Melby Mill within a mile. By 1843, the public house was sold to B.P. Vesly.

Robert is described as a forceful man and is credited with an 'intuitive shrewdness'. He had an express for politics and was reputed as being instrumental in persuading his neighbors in his direction. By 1838, he was elected to serve as county sheriff to which position he dedicated himself until being elected to the Michigan 5th Legislature in 1844. Voters later elected him as director of the Brighton School District in 1851. In addition, land transaction records note a long list of his purchases and sales of properties in the village and surrounding townships.

Robert, born 1801, and Alseta, b. 1817, had three children after arriving in Brighton. Robert died March 24, 1861. William was born in 1836, Georgia, 1839, and Harriet, born May 3, 1854, who died on her 14th birthday in 1868. Georgia married George C. Tomlinson. Their daughter, Florida, born in 1855, spent considerable time with her grandmother, Alseta, being counted at her residence in the 1870 census. At this time Alseta is living in town taking in laundry, one of whom is Dr. Ira Bingham [brother of Gov. Kinsley Bingham]. Alseta died in 1906.

William lived in Brighton east of his life serving as Master of the Brighton Masonic Lodge in 1875-80 and 1885-1900. He was Justice of the Peace beginning in 1875 and through 1906. He did a bit traveling - in Central City, Colorado in 1887 and in Bay City, Michigan, 1871. Although he'd married he was divorced and lived with his mother. His obituary, he died March 5, 1907, describes him as a loving son caring for his mother.

Robert, Alseta, William and Harriet are resting in the Old Village Cemetery by the mill pond. Other Powers, arriving at that early time, took up land in Deerfield, Hamburg, Marion, Genesee and Tyrone townships. Trees were felled, ground broken, homes built and families grew. ONCE IT'S GONE, IT'S GONE (cont. from p. 1)

Each person who feels strongly that there are economic and social benefits to the community with the restoration/planning of the Western house must speak now. To have the kind of community in which one wants to live, each owes that kind of debt. Once it's gone, it's gone!

BOARD MEETING DATE CHANGED

The board will be in attendance at the Brighton City Planning Commission meeting February 25, as it determines the fate of the Western house.

With your presence also the Commission will be aware of the value you place on its preservation. Whether it matters to you or not, once it's gone, it's gone.

Once it's gone, it's gone!
The possible demolition of the 1873 Western House (aka Pink Hotel) must make one wonder why. What would be gained? For 154 years the Western House has served as an attractive, appropriate anchor to the west end of Main Street. The classical architecture; the arched four-over-four windows; the cornices; the color of the locally-made brick, etc., contribute to the variety and texture of Main Street. In addition, the fact that it has survived for so long provides a sense of security. Will what takes its place last as long, or half that long? Once it's gone, it's gone.

Early architecture gives one a sense of place. We mark our territories with memories. These memories of territories make our lives richer, our relationships stronger. To keep from losing our sense of place, we need our landmarks. We can walk into the Western House and say, "This is where it happened, right here." It's not necessary to have lived here forever to appreciate this sense of place. Replacing the Western House helps maintain our connection to our past. Once it's gone, it's gone.

Discarding materials intended for a longer life is morally unacceptable. Adding the Western House to the 140 million tons of waste in the U.S. each year is a hard legacy to leave our grandchildren. Once it's gone, it's gone.

We should be beyond thinking a good, old building has less value than a new one. With today's ingenious technology and creative reconstruction expertise, the Western House can be utilized for today's needs, making the Western House a profitable investment. Once it's gone, it's gone.

We should also be beyond the belief that a property owner can do as one wishes. As a responsible member of a community one owes that community consideration especially if the property is old. More legislation doesn't pay that debt. Once it's gone, it's gone. (cont. p. 3)
